Part 1: The Creative Studio Space

The studio is more than a physical place, even more than a mental space; it is a necessity of being.

Framing the world

The media does more than inform. It shapes the world we live in. How Doug Specht explores how news narratives construct global power and local public culture.

For the 20th anniversary of the Birmingham School of Communications, we have selected a series of articles that explore the school's history and its role in the development of the field of communication studies. The first article, by Doug Specht, explores the school's history and its role in the development of the field of communication studies.

AN ABUNDANCE OF SPACE

It appears on the Ordnance Survey as a black square kilometre of farmland, but Doug Specht finds SE 830 220 a landscape rich with life, memory and meaning andscape under the umbrella of the Ordnance Survey has a long history. It is a landscape that has been shaped by the hands of men and women, and it is a landscape that has been shaped by the hands of men and women. It is a landscape that has been shaped by the hands of men and women, and it is a landscape that has been shaped by the hands of men and women.
